

Contents

Acknowledgements	5
Notes on authors and country specialists	7
Editor's introduction	21
Ursula van Beek
Defining the challenge	21
About the volume	23
A closing thought	35
Chapter 1: Theoretical framework and methodology
Edmund Wnuk-Lipinski and Susanne Fuchs
Introduction	39
Selection of cases	39
Values in transition to democracy	52
Phases in transition to democracy	54
The theoretical model	57
Part one: Political society
Chapter 2: Institutional engineering in new democracies
Jorge Heine
Introduction	65
Approaches to the study of democratisation	65
Rediscovering institutions: The role of political structures	67
The dynamics of transition	70
The conditions for consolidation	72
Constitutions and the constitution-making environment	72
A dynamic approach to constitutional design	75

Constitutions in successful new democracies	77
The president	78
The legislature	79
Cabinets and prime ministers	80
Regional and local government	80
The rules of the game	82
The electoral conundrum	82
Constitutional implementation, emerging regimes and democratic consolidation	89
Conclusions	90

Chapter 3: Post-autocratic party systems and the regime cleavage in new democracies

Hans-Dieter Klingemann

Introduction	95
Conceptual clarifications	96
Hypotheses and data	99
Inclusion of post-autocratic citizens	99
Mutual acceptance and co-operation	100
Data	100
Historical country-by-country classification of post- and anti-autocratic parties	101
Post- and anti-military parties in South Korea	101
Post- and anti-military parties in Chile	105
Post- and anti-communist parties in Poland	109
Post- and anti-communist parties in East Germany	114
Post- and anti-apartheid parties in South Africa	118
Political inclusion: Post-autocratic citizens and the strength of post-autocratic parties in elections	120
Post-autocratic citizens	120
Strength of post-autocratic parties in elections	124
Mutual acceptance and co-operation: The regime cleavage in post-autocratic party systems of the mid-nineties	125
Conclusions	132

Chapter 4: Support for democracy and its consolidation in fragile polities

Radek Markowski

Introduction	135
Basic features of the five polities and societies	136
Different facets of attitudes towards democracy	136
Types of democratic communities	139

The analyses: Determinants of democratic communities and satisfaction with democracy 143
 Democratic community types – who is who? 143
Attitudes towards democratic performance and the democratic ideal among different groups of democratic communities 146
Individual determinants of support for democracy and democratic consolidation 151
 Determinants of satisfaction with democracy 153
 Determinants of the democratic ideal assessment 158
Conclusions 161

Part two: Economic society

Chapter 5: Economic policy and performance and the consolidation of democracy

Philip Mohr

Introduction 165
 Strengths and weaknesses 167
 The international context 171
The statistical picture 174
The nature of economic transformation 182
Country experiences 183
 Poland 183
 East Germany 191
 South Korea 201
 Chile 212
 South Africa 221
Conclusions 228

Part three: Civil society

Chapter 6: Civil society and democracy

Hennie Kotzé and Pierre du Toit

Introduction 243
The transition paradigm 243
The liberal perspective 247
 Civil society and democratic transition 248
 Civil society and democratic consolidation 249
The research problem 250
Concepts 252
The grid 256

Chapter 7: Historical contexts*Hennie Kotzé and Pierre du Toit*

South Africa	259
Pre-transition – South Africa under apartheid:
The polarisation of society	259
The transition	261
The context of consolidation	265
Germany	271
Pre-transition period	271
The period of transition	273
Perspectives	275
Poland	276
Pre-transition – Polish socialism: blueprint vs. reality	276
Transition: Solidarity in the 1980s and the Round Table	280
Democratic consolidation: Institution building, habituation and the democratic model	284
Korea	287
Pre-Transition – Korea under colonialism – resistant “civil society”	287
“Civil society” under the first democratic transition	289
“Civil society” under the military authoritarian regime	290
“Civil society” and the consolidation of democracy	294
Chile	296
Pre-transition	296
The transition	300

Chapter 8: Data analyses, comparisons and synthesis*Hennie Kotzé and Pierre du Toit*

Data	305
Analyses and comparison	305
Civic engagement	306
Chile	306
South Africa	310
Korea	312
Poland	314
East Germany	315
Generalised trust	316
Chile	316
South Africa	317
Korea	318
Poland	319
East Germany	319
Tolerance	320

Contents	19
Chile	321
South Africa	322
Korea	322
Poland	324
East Germany	325
Synthesis	326
Conclusions	327

Part four: Historical memory

Chapter 9: Historical memory and democracy: Setting the scene

Jörn Rüsen

Introduction	337
Basic concepts	338
Democracy and historical culture	341

Chapter 10: Historical memory and identity

Ursula van Beek and Bernard Lategan

Introduction	351
Definitions	352
The cases	353
Exclusion and inclusion	359
Poland	359
Germany	362
South Africa	366
Chile	370
South Korea	372
Conclusions	372

Chapter 11: Remembering, forgetting and the politics of memory

Ursula van Beek and Marek Ziolkowski

Introduction	377
On truth and accountability	378
A thought on justice and reconciliation	388
Other legacies	389
Setting the record straight	393
How to remember? What to forget?	396
Conclusions	403

Chapter 12: Conclusions:
Successful democratisation across cultures?

Dirk Berg-Schlösser

General characteristics and basic indicators	411
Historical memory	415
Economic transformation	417
Civil society	419
Political society	421
MDSO-Analysis	423
Dynamic aspects	425
Remaining problem areas and further perspectives	426
Appendix to chapter 4.....	431
Bibliography	451
Subject Index	473
Name Index	491