

Table of Contents

1. Politics as a concept	9
1.1. Toward a historization of the concept of politics	9
1.2. The horizon shift	11
1.3. Drawing the conceptual horizons	15
1.4. The temporalization of politics	17
1.5. The rhetorical redescription	19
1.6. A repertoire of topoi	21
1.7. Conceptual change and political practices	26
1.8. The practices of conceptual reading and interpretation	28
1.9. The plan of this book	31
2. Three concepts of politics: discipline, sphere and activity	33
2.1. Politics-as-discipline	33
2.1.1. The polis , the city-republic and the state	33
2.1.2. The vernacularization of the polit-vocabulary	35
2.2. The dissolution of the discipline-concept	38
2.2.1. The differentiation of 'the political'	39
2.2.2. The formation of a political sphere	44
2.2.3. Indications of the political aspect	46
2.2.4. The character of the horizon shift	52
2.3. Politics-as-sphere	54
2.3.1. References to spatial thinking	54
2.3.2. The rhetoric of differentiations	56
2.3.3. Demarcating the political in the legal discourse	59
2.4. The origins of the activity-concept	61
2.4.1. Conditions of a temporal understanding of politics	61
2.4.2. The formation of the activity-concept	64
3. Changing practices as conceptual challenges	73
3.1. Democratization and the professionalization of 'politics'	73
3.1.1. Politicians in democracy	73
3.1.2. Numbers, machine and time	75
3.1.3. Organization and oligarchy	78
3.2. The end of gentleman-style politics	81
3.3. Differences between political cultures	83
4. Irregularity	88
4.1. Politics vs. laws	89
4.2. The oddity of politics	94
4.4. The contingency of politics	95
4.5. The ambiguity of politics	100
4.6. Conceptualizing politics via negationis	102
5. Judgment	104
5.1. The reformulation of an old topos	104
5.2. The political capacity of voters	105

5.3. The competence of politicians	110
5.4. Political sense	115
5.5. From prudence to judgment	122
6. Policy	124
6.1. Policy as politics	124
6.2. Policy as a normative regulation	128
6.3. Realpolitik and the criteria of a policy	132
6.4. Policy as regulated politicking	137
6.5. Policy as an abstraction from politics	144
7. Deliberation	147
7.1. Politics as discussion	148
7.2. Persuasion in elections	154
7.3. The rhetoric of the persuasive situation	161
7.4. Performative politics	165
7.5. Deliberation, persuasion, performance	171
8. Commitment	173
8.1. Politics as willing	174
8.2. The binding decision	181
8.3. Division	186
8.4. Choice	190
8.5. Commitment and contingency	196
9. Contestation	199
9.1. Conflict as a precondition of politics	200
9.2. Provoking controversies	205
9.3. Change	208
9.4. Politics from below	211
9.5. The moment of contestation	213
10. Possibility	216
10.1. The art of the possible	217
10.2. The art of the impossible	219
10.3. Opportunism	224
10.4. Chance	229
10.5. The horizon of the possible	234
11. Situation	238
11.1. The scarce time of politicians	238
11.2. Seizing the moment	241
11.3. The utilization of the occasions	246
11.4. Times of politics	251
11.5. Thinking in terms of situations	259
12. Play & game	262
12.1. The decline of politics into a game	263
12.2. The ambiguities of game	266
12.3. The fascination of the game	271

12.4. The politics of playing	276
12.5. The devaluation of the seriousness	282
13. The time-spectrum of politics	285
13.1. Politics – a concept of low intertextuality	285
13.2. Intra- and intertopical conceptual shifts	287
13.3. The temporalization of scarcity	294
13.4. Politics – a spectrum of activities	298
References
1. Primary sources	300
2. Literature	322
Index of authors	329