

TABLE OF CONTENTS

I. Introduction	1
II. Border studies	5
II.1. New border studies	6
II.1.1. The challenges to border studies	8
II.1.2. Ambiguity at the border: borderlands, separation and connection	10
II.1.3. Border management	12
II.1.4. The boundaries of border studies	13
II.2. "Old" border studies	16
II.2.1. Scientific borders in war and peace	16
II.2.2. Ambiguous borderlands and borders in flux	17
II.2.3. The role of border studies	18
II.2.4. Border studies now and then	20
II.3. Reassessing border studies	21
II.3.1. The disciplinary space of geopolitics and international relations	21
II.3.2. The inside and the outside of the territorial state	23
II.3.3. Prescribed transgressions	24
II.3.4. Beyond the limits of border studies	26
II.4. Deleuze and Guattari and border studies	27
II.4.1. Transgression, borders and the state	29
II.4.2. Borders, practice and the state	31
II.4.3. The history of the relation between transgression and regression	32
II.4.4. Border studies and transgression	34
III. The histories of the German and Polish Others	37
II.1. Histories and nationalisms of Germany and Poland	42
III.1.1. Historical overview: Germany and Poland	42
III.1.2. National narratives: The butterfly and the wolf	46
III.2. The age of nationalism: creating the Self and the Other	48
III.2.1. The creation of the Self in Germany and Poland	49
III.2.2. The enlightened, the laborious and the invention of the "Polish economy"	54

III.2.3. The moving Other: the “Drang nach Osten”	58
III.2.4. Space and the nations: Mitteleuropa-debates	59
III.2.5. Polish spaces	61
III.3. The world wars: redefining the relation between Self and Other	65
III.3.1. Towards the First World War: Poland becomes “not noticeable”	66
III.3.2. National Socialism, planning and the “East”	67
III.4. After the war: towards European discourse	71
III.4.1. Post-war Germany	71
III.4.2. Poland after World War Two	75
III.5. Conclusion: The history of German-Polish Selves and Others	78
IV. Methodology	80
IV.1. The dynamics of the field	80
IV.1.1. Defining the field	81
IV.1.2. Encounters and interaction	82
IV.1.3. Connections and conflict lines	82
IV.2. Methods and fieldwork	84
IV.2.1. The logic of case studies	84
IV.2.2. Interviewing	87
IV.2.3. Newspaper archive research	89
IV.3. Analysis methods	92
IV.3.1. Discourse analysis as a framework	92
IV.3.2. Analysis of the interviews	94
IV.3.3. Analysis of the newspaper articles	95
IV.4. Conclusion to the methodology	96
V. German-Polish politics in the 1990s	98
V.1. The German-Polish border	100
V.2. Geopolitical alignments	101
V.3. Uneasy relations with the Other	103
V.4. Polish, German and Other populations	105
V.5. Reconciliation and cross-border cooperation	110
V.6. Conclusion	112

IV. German discourse on Poland	114
IV.1. First encounters with a strange land	115
IV.2. Travel-writing about Germany and Poland	117
IV.2.1. The gaze of the traveller	118
IV.2.2. Modifications of the gaze	121
IV.2.3. Border migrants	122
IV.2.4. The eastern journey as a challenge to the stereotypes	123
IV.3. Backward-looking worlds	125
IV.3.1. Back to a Germanic era	125
IV.3.2. The unreal mode	126
IV.3.3. Aristocratic lands in uncaring hands	128
IV.3.4. "The past intrudes into the present consciousness"	129
IV.3.5. Contesting the Germanisation of the past	131
IV.3.6. Silesia as contested	132
IV.4. Borderlands	133
IV.4.1. A zone of contradiction	133
IV.4.2 Re-Interpreting Easternness	135
IV.4.3. A strange country	137
IV.5. The criminal landscape	138
IV.5.1. Migrations, invasions and chaos	138
IV.5.2. Criminal flows and routes	140
IV.5.3. Writing in the Gothic mode	141
IV.5.4. Writing the crime out of Poland	142
IV.6. Geopolitical operations	143
IV.7. Good examples	145
IV.7.1. Bridges and rivers	145
IV.7.2. The Oder as a symbol of change	146
IV.8. Conclusion: The German discourse on Poland	147
VII. Polish discourse on Germany	150
VII. 1. Introduction: The frame of the decade	150
VII.2. Germany from a distance	154

VII.2.1. Historical repercussions	154
VII.2.2. Stereotypes of Poland	155
VII.2.3. Returning and shifting the gaze	157
VII.3. Travel stories past and present: Berlin as a central place	160
VII.4. German and Polish borderlands	163
VII.4.1. The strange place	163
VII.4.2. Lost connections and approaches rejected	166
VII.4.3. The abandoned German borderlands	167
VII.4.4. The connected Polish side	169
VII.5. Drang nach Osten and Westen	170
VII.5.1. Germans everywhere: The new Drang	171
VII.5.2. The changed role of Germany: Drang as flight	172
VII.5.3. The reverse Drang	174
VII.6. The territorial transformation: re-writing Polish space	177
VII.6.1. Poland's new territory of flows and connections	178
VII.6.2. Journeys to the eastern border	182
VII.7. European geopolitics	185
VII.7.1. Poland as included and excluded in Europe	186
VII.7.2. "Realist" geopolitics and other discourses	189
VII.8. Conclusion: Polish discourse on Germany	192
VIII. The micro-politics of German-Polish relations	194
VIII.1. The case studies	194
VIII.1.1. Constructions of Silesia	195
VIII.1.2. International Park Lower Oder	197
VIII.1.3. City partnership Kreuzberg-Szczecin	198
VIII.2. Navigating the field	200
VIII.2.1. Defining the project at different scales	201
VIII.2.2. Relating to other institutions in the field	207
VIII.3. Negotiating Self and Other: cross-border relationships	214
VIII.3.1. Contexts for approaching, connection, relationships and separation	214

VIII.3.2. Sociological and historical narratives	216
VIII.3.3. The functional mappings of Berlin and Szczecin	220
VIII.4. Challenged borders and ambiguous connections	224
VIII.4.1. Dynamic pictures, segmented landscapes	225
VIII.4.2. To connect or not to connect	227
VIII.4.3. “Natural” borders or connections	229
VIII.4.4. Borders and relationships	234
VIII.4.5. The role of the Other	240
VIII.5. Transgression and regression	244
VIII.5.1. The transgression of borders and history	245
VIII.5.2. The EU as a line of flight	248
VIII.5.3. Intangible connections	252
VIII.5.4. Universal and everyday transgression	254
VIII.6. Conclusion: the micro-politics of German-Polish cooperation	257
IX. Conclusion: Cross-border cooperation and the rule of transgression	261
X. Appendix: The German-Polish border region	265
XI. References	266

LIST OF TABLES

Table 1: Newspaper corpus	89
Table 2: Imbalances in the press coverage	91
Table 3: Headlines of Gazeta Wyborcza, 1989-1991	150

LIST OF MAPS

The German-Polish border region	265
---------------------------------	-----