1. Introduction	1
2. Between cycling and gridlock: Can collective decision-making bodies produce stable decisions?	10
2.1. The issue of cyclical decisions: Is chaos inevitable in democratic systems?	11
2.1.1. Conditions of collective actors for having transitive preferences.....	12
2.1.2. Stable collective decisions through institutional rules or logrolling?	16
2.1.3. Regions of stability in ‘legislative chaos’: the core and the uncovered set	19
2.1.4. Still ‘legislative chaos’ in more than two dimensions? – The relationship between the dimensionality of the conflict space, voting rules and the stability of collective decisions.....	23
2.2. Temporal stability of collective decisions: The problem of gridlock and reform	26
2.3. Theorising the impact of EU enlargement on the stability of legislative decisions	34
2.4. The Treaty of Lisbon: Theorising its impact on the stability of decision-making	42
2.5. Winners and losers in EU legislative decisions before and after enlargement: The concept of legislative gain.....	47

2.6. Summary and outlook to the empirical chapters.....	52
3. Research design.....	54
3.1. Description of data sets	54
3.1.1. The DEU data set: the ‘original’ and the reduced version.....	54
3.1.2. The EU-25 data set.....	66
3.2. Overview of used statistical methods.....	71
4. The low dimensionality of European legislative decisions: A case-by-case analysis.....	73
4.1. Previous research and theoretical background	74
4.2. Research design and applied methods.....	79
4.3. Results: One- and two-dimensional conflicts in legislative decisions....	84
4.3.1. Illustrating Case studies	84
4.3.2. Results of dimensionality analysis: Only one and two-dimensional conflicts in EU legislative decisions	92
4.4. Conclusion	97
5. Old but not sclerotic: Gridlock and policy change in the EU-15.....	100
5.1. Theoretical background: Core, winset and logrolling as explanations for policy change.....	102
5.2. The proposal on the Euro-Mediterranean partnership policy (MEDA) - A case study.....	106
5.3. Explaining policy change by the core, the winset and logrolling - A regression analysis	112
5.3.1. Descriptive statistics of the main model variables	112
5.3.2. The size of the core and winset as predictors for policy change.....	114
5.3.3. Comparison of core, winset and logrolling model	123
5.4. A fictive boost for reform: Simulation of core and winset under more

flexible decision rules for the EU-15	127
5.5. The powers of the European Commission as an agenda setter and executive power.....	129
5.6. Conclusion	134
6. Increasing sclerosis and its cure: Gridlock and policy change in the EU after enlargement and the coming into effect of the Treaty of Lisbon	141
6.1. Theoretical background: enlargement and policy stability.....	142
6.2. Data and research design.....	145
6.3. Policy stability after enlargement and institutional reform: An analysis of the core for nine European conflict lines.....	149
6.3.1. Illustration of the results for two important European conflict lines.....	152
6.4. The two-dimensional conflict space of the enlarged EU.....	158
6.5. Likely effects of future enlargements: An outlook to the (possible) accession of Romania, Bulgaria, Turkey and the western Balkans.....	167
6.6. Conclusion	171
7. The underestimated role of political conflict for the efficiency of decision-making in the EU: A survival analysis	175
7.1. Theoretical background.....	177
7.1.1. Review and critique of previous empirical research.....	179
7.1.2. Specification of hypothesis and models.....	182
7.2. Research design	185
7.3. Results.....	187
7.4. Conclusion and outlook.....	192
8. Winners and losers of legislative decisions in the EU: before and after enlargement	194
8.1. Theoretical background and the concept of legislative gain	196
8.2. Data and research design.....	200

8.3. Winners and losers in the EU-15 and the enlarged EU under Nice and the Lisbon Treaty.....	202
8.4. Conclusion	214
9. Summary and Conclusions.....	216
